Conway Castle was erected in 1284 by Edward I. as a safeguard against Welsh insurrection, it being built in such a position as to command the Pass of Penmaenmawr. The fortress played a prominent part in subsequent years, and in 1646 stood for the King against the Parliamentary troops, only surrendering after a long siege. Charles II. granted it to the Earl of Conway, by whom it was dismantled, and it has ever since remained a picturesque ruin.
